

TO: All new AI's and TA's in the College of Humanities
FROM: Prof. John Trimble, Associate Director of Freshman English
DATE: August 14, 1978

On the evening of August 31, the Freshman English Office, with a generous assist from Dean Stanley Werbow, is again hosting a gigunda outdoor barbecue for all new AI's and TA's in the College of Humanities.

This Event, fast becoming an annual rite, is worth attending because:

- The food we serve--beef brisket, barbecued sausage, potato salad, beans--is pretty down-home stuff, and plentiful.
- It's free, which is handy.
- Thursday is an otherwise ho-hum day--and really dreary if you have to do your own cooking & dishwashing.
- You have a chance to cavort with a lot of other newcomers, both from your own department and from other departments in the Humanities.
- It's not every day that you get to face off against Dean Werbow at volleyball.

The only hitches: (1) spouses aren't invited, not because we don't like spouses but because they eat too much and our budget won't allow it; (2) the liquids we dispense are of the non-Dionysian variety, so if you can't imagine eating Texas brisket without a Pearl or Boone Mountain chaser, plan on bringing your own spirits.

Mark on your calendars, then:

Place: Pease Park, just off campus (see map enclosed).

Time: Thursday evening, August 31, from 6:30 till 10:00.

Dress: Jeans and such.

Misc: If you own a volleyball, frisbee, football, or pneumatic jackhammer, bring it along so we can work off all the food.

Do come. You won't be disappointed.
